Transition of care: Wound Management

Shaunda Crane, Nurse Practitioner and Advanced Practice Nurse Specialist, has over 12 years experience as a wound specialist, working in diverse settings with Kaiser Permanente, Sutter Health, and Marshall Medical Center. She was educated and trained in wound, ostomy, foot and nail care through Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia, has masters degrees in Nursing and Sociology, maintains her certification in public health, and is pursuing advanced certification related to wounds and mental health.

As prior Director of Wound and Hyperbaric Oxygen Therapy Department at MMC, Shaunda led hyperbaric oxygen therapy and advanced wound care modalities in both the inpatient and outpatient settings. She oversaw the revenue cycle, led EMR builds, and has presented on advanced wound care modalities in a variety of settings. She has worked in emergency and surgical medicine, led “hospital-at-home”, street medicine, and transitions of care programs, coordinating with a variety of community agencies.

Shaunda specializes in comprehensive wound management, co-treating comorbidities correlated with wound outcomes and overall health, and partners to build multi-agency programs that break barriers related to access to care. She has a passion for reaching patients through innovative initiatives and technological advances that promote successful patient outcomes. To achieve these goals, she welcomes collaboration and partnerships with colleagues, students, and other agencies that integrate positive, quality, efficient patient care strategies.
